Paruresis in the News
Recently, Dr. Steven Soifer did a phone interview with W Radio Columbia, Prisa Media Group, about shy bladder syndrome in Latin America and Spain. Dr. Soifer estimated that 3.5 million people in Colombia, and about the same number in Spain, suffer from this social anxiety disorder known medically as paruresis. W Radio station is part of Prisa Group, the most important media conglomerate in the Spanish speaking world. Their audiences in Colombia, Panama, Spain and the U.S. add up to more than three million people.

IPA News

We're now focused on raising money for our Endowment Fund. To date we have raised about $125,000 in cash and another $125,000 in pledges toward our $1 million goal by our 25th anniversary. That is, we are about ¼ of the way there. To contribute to the Endowment Fund you can send a check (earmarked Endowment Fund) to us or you can donate online by clicking here. When you donate online make sure to choose Endowment Fund in the section Apply My Donation To.

We need some people like Sylvia Bloom from the NYT article to think of IPA as their legacy. For example, only 30 gifts of $25,000 each (even given over time) would get us to our goal (as would one gift of $750k). This is where planned giving comes in.

We have a page I bet many of you haven't seen: https://paruresis.org/planned-giving/. There are plenty of ways to give that will make a significant impact, and we'll explain more next month.

I just wanted to pop in and say that I've learned so much from these forums over the last month. It's so great knowing there are others out there that deal with this issue, although it makes me kind of sad that anyone has to deal with it at all. Two months ago, my paruresis really escalated, not sure why exactly, to where I could not even go in my own house with my family there, and even had trouble going by myself, most likely from the stress and anxiety associated with the increase of my paruresis. I ended up in the emergency room with a Foley catheter...READ THE REST HERE!
